Brother Martin tells Brother Frank about his past. The reason he joined the monastic order was because his womanising lifestyle was getting out of control. He turned to the church to save himself (and others) from his own libertine dissipation - but it isn't working.

Brother Martin prays to God. He is interrupted by Brother Frank, who reveals himself to be the father of a young woman, Kitty Flanagan, who Brother Martin had made pregnant then abandoned in his previous, promiscuous life. Brother Frank ties up Brother Martin then forces him to drink poison from a distinctive goblet.

Paul calls his friend Mike to discuss the discovery of the goblet, the haunting of the priory and the whereabouts of 'old Mrs Flanagan.'

Paul and Sarah climb the bell-tower to disinter the bones of Brother Martin. The ascent is haunted by the vision of Brother Martin dying in his chair; and by his restless Shakespeare quotations. Sarah is terrified but perseveres. The bones are retrieved from the priory and planted instead at the bottom of the garden of Mrs Flanagan, the cat-owning woman and the last descendant of Brother Frank. The ghost has been laid to rest. On television, a new production of Richard III is screened.

Davis Madison enters Franklin's dressing room under the pretext of congratulating him on the show, and clocking off for the night. He espies Franklin's briefcase full of magic tricks. He leaves and lurks by the door, as Franklin sets off home.

In a London police station, the telephone rings. The constable picks it up, and learns from New York that a gunman has come to London aboard the same ship as Franklin. He doesn't emerge, his assistant smash it open, water cascades over the stage, and Franklin miraculously appears in disguise from elsewhere. Bartholomew Franklin changes in his dressing room. The great escapologist asks his assistant Molly to count the box-office takings. A visitor arrives from London. It is Mr Schultz, who has booked Franklin for the Adelphi Theatre in the West End.

A hubbub on the streets of London. Newspapers fly from the newsstands, as the city anticipates Franklin's arrival. The escapologist is amazing!, say the cockneys - almost as amazing as Boris Johnson for London mayor.

The renowned actress Lilian MacIvor changes in her dressing room. Mr Schultz enters and tells her that 'The Country Wife' is to close. It is being replaced by an American escapologist. Lilian is outraged, and flounces out.

An old gent summons his batman, Harris, to ask about the fuss surrounding this escapologist. Harris promises to secure tickets for Lord Mandeville and his ward. The gent summons his ward and niece, Philomena. They discuss her French lessons. She has learnt the phrase 'je t'adore.'

[New Delhi Freight Train]. A gunman and fugitive from the southern states, Davis Madison, has arrived in New York. He sees Bartholomew Franklin set to board a ship for England. He offers to carry Franklin's bags - at the very moment at which Franklin's current porter quits. Davis is hired, and boards the vessel with Franklin.

Philomena is taking her French lessons with le professeur. He is teaching her everyday phrases, but she is more interested in the phrases of love. As the lesson ends, the housekeeper Mrs Hawkins enters, and le professeur invites her for a drink. Philomena is scandalised with jealousy.

Davis Madison is aboard the ship bound for England. He counts the three bullets left in his gun, and vows to cut and run when the new country is reached. Franklin appears and Maybe they could go out sometime. [You Sexy Thing]. She implies that she might, if Stevie would only give her his gun. Stevie is reluctant to do so.

At the wake for the murdered Paolo, momma Peroni and Vittorio grieve. Don Gianluigi enters, distraught, and tells Vittorio that at his last remaining nephew - well, one of only two remaining - the family must now come under his charge. And revenge must be theirs.

Jimmy Jazz is in his den, with the curiously shaped box. What could be inside? He slowly prises it open - and out jumps Fabrizio. It was Fabrizio who beat up Jimmy Jazz the other night; and now he has anticipated Jimmy's dockyard heist and hidden himself in the shipment to scupper the plan and avenge Paolo's killing. Two towering men, Jimmy and Fabrizio exchange blows, coolly, while discussing their old friendship and current enmity. Fabrizio left town 15 years previously with Jimmy's girl in tow. But now the ginger man is back in town [Ginger Man] to inherit control of the Gianluigi mob. And by nightfall, he promises, either Jimmy or Fabrizio himself will be dead.

Vittorio is in a call box. He tries to phone his old friend Elsie - but she tells him she's tied up with another guy right now.

Stevie apologises to Jimmy. He's lost his gun. Can he have another one? They both know who has the gun, and a stern Jimmy insists Stevie recover it himself.

The Gianluigi clan gather outside Jimmy Jazz's hideaway. The wheelchair-bound Momma Peroni, Don Gianluigi, and Vittorio cock their pistols and break in through the fire escape. While Stevie tries to persuade Crackerjack to return him his gun, downstairs Momma is told to wait in the corridor. Crackerjack shoots the gun around to show Stevie
