

Chizeler was well; differentiation (from consumer), relevance (growing) and reeling of responsibility among people as an appeal, esteem (would be well regarded brand equity in the corporate citizenship concept. We can apply the four key components of brand equity according to Brand Asset Valuator to the brand equity of the citizen to tease apart and take over the consumer. We already have now for the citizen to tease apart and take over the consumer. We already have successes of the grass root movement and the growing engagement of people trying to deal with multiple social and environmental issues, it might be time

Because copyleft licensing is becoming more and more common in the United States, the market-based concept could be applied as well. Maybe we're the ones missing a convergence of values. With the growth and make them become responsible again and being in charge of their present and future. Quite a remarkable concept!

throughout the community, the dedicated efforts of all community members will result in a better life for all citizens. Branding citizen participation as a concept would mean to re-empower the people, through their own participation, volunteer work and efforts to improve the life for all.

What if we would re-create the identity of the citizen? Anyone working towards the betterment of society would be automatically considered a citizen, so what if we were able to re-brand people as citizens?

that "they are the centre of the world". This created individualism and dependence on one's own resources, as well as the need to expand people's interests beyond their local community.

from most citizens, "The Defender of the Commons". Also, Hartmann mentioned that people, as consumers, have been instrumentalized, preening notion is spreading worldwide via consumerism. We have been branded as consumers. Contrary to many places in the world, people are first and

I found really interesting his analysis on PUBLIC IDENTITY. Hartmann noted that in the United States, our identity is one of a consumer and that use the tools of defining arguments, persuade the public and eventually win elections.

He stated that in order to be effective in the public arena, one must understand the goals of certain organizations, how they operate, and what they want to accomplish.

"Beyond Frame: How deep neuro-linguistic programming commutes" debaters at the Bioenerges Conference, during Thom Hartmann intervention.

through the work of George Lakoff (Don't Think of an Elephant). Yesterday, I just reconnected with the same concept about framing words, discussions.

<http://www.tripelpunkt.com/2005/10/branding-citizen/>

Branding citizen?

and respected), knowledge (people are familiar with the concept of Citizenship). The additional benefit of branding consumers to citizens is that it might also change the world perception on American society, not at its

Leading brand designer Marc Gobé, building on his highly successful Emotional Branding strategy, wrote recently the book: Citizen Brand. The concept is designed to help companies earn the trust of today's consumers.

concept is designed to help companies earn the trust of today's consumers. Gobé argues that corporations need a new vision to survive in the "emotional economy," challenging them to develop more creative and socially responsible brand strategies. Perhaps Mr. Gobé's most radical step further and not refer people as consumer any longer

••• PARTICIPATORY SENSING (ENGAGE COMMUNITIES)

- environmental monitoring
  - pervasive computing
  - carnival (carnivalesque: subverts and liberates the assumptions of the dominant style)
  - street protest **
  - street performance
  - political activism

snout

These excerpts are extrapolated from the visual essay I have been composing at Proboscis loosely based on Proboscis' work and projects. First it developed as a concise mind map which outlined the fundamental design underpinning Proboscis, long journey - according to me obviously. It then evolved and bloomed in different and unexpected directions, drawing on my past knowledge, feeding on fortuitous connections and new sources of inspiration. It was elaborated following different paths, or 'themes', even if I found myself juxtaposing pictures or quotations, originally designed for separate themes, pleasantly coming together. The lines I have drawn are just some of the infinite possible threads I could have kept to. This is my own series of allusions, suggestions, relations.

Intro

Visual Essay - Citizen

public-photography-restictions photography-news/2047154/photographers-gather-protest-<http://www.bsp-online.com/british-journal-of/> public places around the country

Hall today to protest photography restrictions imposed in semi-

Photographers gather to protest public Photography

the amendments impact on the property industry rather than the possibility of a Zist industry reactions to the news have. You will not be surprised to hear, focused more on opened up to protests.

bill to allow so-called quasi-public spaces in areas such as shopping centres to be website of detailed proposals by Tom Watson MP to amend the Protection of Freedoms Bill to allow for more diverse, privately funded activities in which we

he would do doubt have read with pleasure the publication last month on the Parliament Gog of Adolf Hitler will emerge from their timeless wastes.

desert. Modern shopping malls have much the same function. A future Rimbaud. Van motel stands outside time. It's no coincidence that prestigious leaders merge from the their own futures, and are thus free of time. Anything created there, a city, a pyramid, a exhibition, he said. "Deserts possess a particular magic, since they have exhausted correspondent. On the subject of shopping malls, in his 1970 collection The Arctics it UG Berlin were alive today he would have made a very interesting retai

By Christian Meccia on June 21, 2011 12:41 PM

[\*\* street protest](http://www.stagesetze.com/blog/property-law/2011/06/quasi-public-spaces-and-quasi-public-spaces-and-prot

<div data-bbox=)

Visual Essay - Citizen

Elena Festa

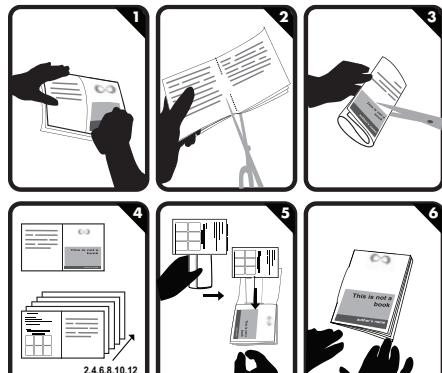

2011-10-17

Published by Elena Festa

Elena Festa - festa.elena@hotmail.com

One of four eBooks created during an internship at Proboscis made with www.bookleteer.com from proboscis

<http://bktr.it/nLDxhv>

supermundane) ► reason, free inquiry meaning and shape to their own lives (not theistic and human beings have the right to and responsibility to give HUMANISM is a democratic and ethical life stance,

Citizenship in Contemporary Debates
<<http://science.jrank.org/pages/8630/Citizenship-Overview->> living question in contemporary thought.

Lignaciffr and Benjamin Constant (1767-1830)—continues to be a republicanism, and his liberal critics such as Adam Smith (see the argument between Rousseau, with his uncompromising expresses our humanity. So we see that one of the core debates that has animated political philosophy throughout his history—for instance, in framework for more diverse, privately funded activities in which we humanity, or whether it ought merely to furnish a procedural constitutes a privileged location for the expression of our proper originates in Aristotle's doctrine of citizenship, is whether civic life life with splendor" (Arendt, p. 285). The issue here, as it was the space of men's free deeds and living words, which could endow posed by Socrates, of how "to bear life's burden". It was the polis' Revolution, she endorses the ancient Greek solution to the problem, represented by Hananah Arendt when, at the conclusion of On Rawls, pp. 205-206). The opposing side is undeniably subordinate to that of public life it views as mistaken" (Rawls, pp. 420-421; cf. pp. 205-206). Liberal justice as Rawls which human beings achieve their fullest realization, their greatest good, is in the activities of political life.... Liberal justice as Rawls modest doctrine": "Civic humanists believe that the activity in "civic humanism" ("classical republicanism", he regards as a more fundamental issue is posed by Rawls in relation to what he calls

Citizenship In Contemporary Debates

Not surprisingly, the problem of citizenship has continued to shape contemporary debates in political philosophy. A CITIZEN HAS BOTH RIGHTS AND RESPONSABILITIES (SOCIAL CONTRACT THEORY)

[...] More recently, new challenges to liberal citizenship have arisen in the debates about feminism and multiculturalism. As regards the latter, important arguments have been mounted to the effect that civic norms defined within the horizon of liberalism cannot do justice to the profound forms of cultural diversity ("deep diversity") that characterize virtually all political communities today. The basic multiculturalist idea is that liberal societies cannot fully honor the citizenship of their members if essential aspects of the identity of those members are slighted or treated as irrelevant to citizenship. Like any doctrine in political theory, multiculturalism comes in strikingly different versions. In Iris Young's view, liberal citizenship must be radically reconstructed so as to acknowledge an emphatic "politics of difference." In Will Kymlicka's more moderate view, accommodations to cultural difference are themselves required by liberal justice, rightly understood. According to the latter view, multiculturalism is merely a more effective (and more just) vehicle for the integration of minorities into a liberal civic regime, whereas according to the former view, the liberal vision of citizenship is intrinsically flawed, since liberal universalism is simply a mask for the hegemony of a majority culture. At the same time, one can say that the powerful challenges to liberal understandings of citizenship generated by communitarian, civic-republican, and multiculturalist theorists have provoked, in response, more robust and more philosophical theories of citizenship from the liberal side. Jürgen Habermas's theory of communicative action can be interpreted as a new liberal (or post-liberal) doctrine of citizenship, and John Rawls's ambitious meditation on the notion of "public reason" in the latter phase of his intellectual career offers another such doctrine. The