

Image Copyright Thabo Jaiyesimi, 2007

Black urbanism can be seen as a schizoid sign that haunts and inhabits urbanism and the myth of the 'white city'. It is the ghost in the machine that is capable of inducing the urban machine into moments of paranoid breakdown (riots, moral panics over crime) while also reconfiguring the machine into new modes of innovation, creativity and expression (music, arts, architecture).

Peckham Rising

Paul Goodwin

DIFFUSION GENERATOR

What I call the paradox of black urbanism pertains to the contradiction nature of the present conjunction where 'blackness' is informing what it means to be 'urban', in a cultural sense but at the same time, in economic and social terms, many black communities are still living in marginal and precarious conditions throughout the world.

Image Copyright Danielle Tamagni, 2007

Peckham Rising aims to launch a sound assembly of urban street photography, sound library and town square. Deploying a critical programme and new public spaces such as the pathology and family breakdown etc. This almost metaphysical image of Peckham's urban estates, moral and family breakdown etc. This undeconstructed, mythical symbol of all the ills of Peckham has emerged in the last few years as an urban society: gun crime, feral youth, sink arrival in the area of a huge regeneration. Pathology has remained unchanged despite the programme and new public spaces such as the library and town square. Deploying a critical assembly of urban street photography, sound library and town square. Deploying a critical programme and new public spaces such as the pathology and family breakdown etc. This almost metaphysical image of Peckham's urban estates, moral and family breakdown etc. This undeconstructed, mythical symbol of all the ills of Peckham has emerged in the last few years as an urban society: gun crime, feral youth, sink

Peckham Rising explores the other city

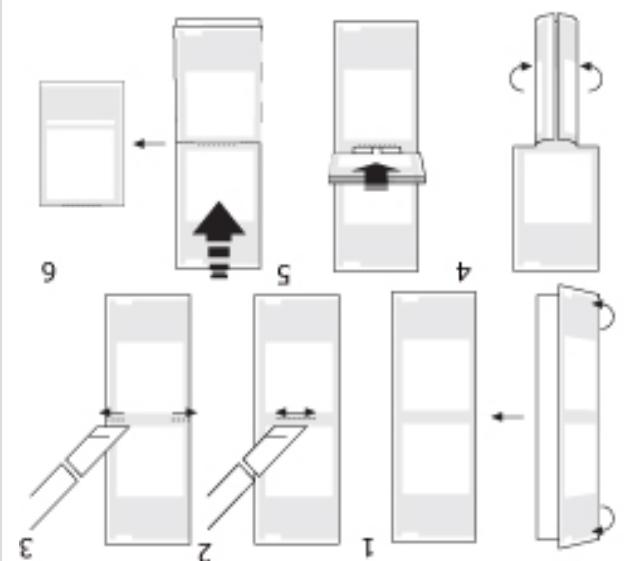

The Sassoon Gallery

4th September - 9th September 2007

An exhibition of photography, sound and text with artists Danielle Tamagni, Thabo Jaiyesimi and Janine Lai. Curated by Paul Goodwin.

Rising is a rebellion > adj 2 increasing in rank or maturity

Peckham Rising

available to download, print out and share.
DIFFUSION eBooks are designed to be freely www.diffusion.org.uk

created on: Tue Sep 11 14:24:36 2007
Paul Goodwin
Peckham Rising

counter intuitive and deconstructive re-visioning of the area. The complex and little understood social ecology of 'street life' on Rye Lane is the focus of the evocative and impressionistic images of Daniele Tamagni and Thabo Jaiyesimi. Framing the images, Janine Lai's sound interventions give voice to the largely unheard 'shouts in the street' of Peckham residents and market users. Paul Goodwin's textual interventions bring theory into the gallery space where it can dialogue with images and sound. Peckham Rising creates a temporary space of contemplation about the nature of contemporary urbanism and its 'other': the so-called ghetto. The exhibition invites critical reflection about the need to creatively engage the cosmopolitan, diverse and complex nature of a great metropolis such as London in the 21st century. Peckham Rising attempts, in a modest but bold gesture, to open one of the many paths of creative thinking and action to build the city of the future. The exhibition speculates on the notion that Peckham, with all its contradictions, afflictions and creative energies, may emerge as a Capital of the 21st Century.

Paul Goodwin

Curator

diversity. This shift of understanding is not just and singularity; in other words, their complexity and produced but also how or what they represent understanding of not only how these spaces are of the ghetto. This concept has limited our understood through the ideologically loaded prism excluded urbanisms - have been largely subaltern urbanisms, underground urbanisms, urbanism. Until now these emergent urbanisms - urbanisms. There is not just one unified created their own urban worlds; their own Peckham, black people and immigrants have From Harlem to Chicago, from Brexit to to

Image Copyright Thabo Jaiyesimi, 2007

Artists:

Daniele Tamagni is an art historian and freelance photographer from Italy / www.photodantam.com

Thabo Jaiyesimi is a photographer based in London / www.thabojaiyesimi.co.uk

Janine Lai is a filmmaker and artist based in London / smell.the.media@gmail.com

Curator:

Paul Goodwin is a geographer and urban theorist based at Goldsmiths, University of London / www.goldsmiths.ac.uk/cucr

Further Information:

www.myspace.com/peckhamrising

www.thesassoongallery.co.uk

www.goldsmiths.ac.uk/cucr

Peckham Rising eBook, Copyright Paul Goodwin, 2007.

academic or conceptual. It has major implications for the way we deal with 'black', immigrant or 'ghetto' spaces in terms of policy and intervention in the real world.

Image Copyright Daniele Tamagni, 2007

The history of otherness and blackness needs to be incorporated and written into the heart of the history of urbanism. Studies of racism and the 'race relations paradigm' do not cover the totality of the black urban experience. Black people are not just victims. Histories of community building, the making and remaking of cultures, art and creative practices, the construction and deconstruction of urban landscapes, and their reurbanisation to black and disident urban communities, all need to be addressed by urbanists today. This crucial nexus - the relationships between black people and their urban landscapes today - has been the construction of urban landscapes - has been deconstructed by the least researched in urban studies. One of the least researched in urban studies, the construction of urban land-relationships - has been the construction of urban landscapes - has been deconstructed by the least researched in urban studies.

Image Copyright Thabo Jaiyesimi, 2007

Image Copyright Thabo Jaiyesimi, 2007

done so much to help revive. In other words, black urbanites and the expressive dissident cultures they help produce, must be seen as active participants and innovators in the production of urban spaces not just passive victims of urban decay or a 'culture of poverty'.

Image Copyright Thabo Jaiyesimi, 2007

housing estates, high rises, prisons, urban renovation zones, no go areas, environmentally unsound sites, bidonvilles, badlands etc., the list goes on and on. Obviously many black people, especially in the United States and to a lesser extent in Britain, in the post civil rights era, have made tremendous gains in economic wealth and social class. There is a steady movement of the black middle classes to richer suburban areas and even evidence of black gentrification of certain formerly run down inner city neighbourhoods (Harlem in Manhattan and Fort Greene in Brooklyn, New York). Any study of black urbanism certainly needs to factor this development into its analysis. The fact remains, however, that relative black urban disadvantage, particularly when considered on a global scale, far outweighs black suburbanisation, gentrification and upward urban mobility.

and spaces of the metropolitan areas they have designed and creating the very neighbourhoods are and should be more engaged in the process of black urbanism; one in which black communities implication of this is a more active definition of neighbourhoods all over the world. The and imagined - by black communities in cities and engagement and building of urban spaces - real but also, in a more active sense, as a process of experience of city life from a black perspective urbanism, as a form of urban culture and My intention is to create a discourse of 'black blackness'. enriching experiences of both 'city life' and that excludes many positive, diverse and are being re-defined in narrow, stereotypical ways station Xtra defines itself as a purveyor of 'street culture'. In both cases, 'urban' and 'blackness', street culture (e.g. BBC radio's black music, urban culture, that often translates as 'ghetto', or themselves through a rather narrow conception of black people, especially black youth, are defining games, music videos, internet sites etc) - so more 'blackness' - especially in a virtual sense (video As urbanism is being defined more in terms of

Image Copyright Danielle Tamagni, 2007

Image Copyright Danielle Tamagni, 2007

