diffusions=n=rator

Saki (H H Munro)

The Lumber Room

"I told you not to, and now I tell you that you may," came the voice from the rain-water tank, rather impatiently.

"I was told I wasn't to go into the gooseberry garden," said Nicholas promptly.

"Me," came the answer from the other side of the wall; "didn't you hear me? I've been looking for you in the gooseberry garden, and I've slipped into the rain-water tank. Luckily there's no water in it, but the sides are slippery and I can't get out. Fetch the little ladder from under the cherry tree --"

"Who's calling?" he asked.

Presently the angry repetitions of Nicholas' name gave way to a shriek, and a cry for somebody to come quickly. Nicholas shut the book, restored it carefully to its place in a corner, and shook some dust from a neighbouring pile of newspapers over it. Then he crept from the room, locked the door, and replaced the key exactly where he had found it. His aunt was still calling his name when he sauntered into the front garden.

It was probably the first time for twenty years that anyone had smiled in that lumber-room.

error in matters about which they had expressed better people had been proved to be profoundly in mind of Nicholas, was that the older, wiser, and in the whole affair, as it presented itself to the great length, but the fact that stood out clearest te no begreine sew klim-bne-beerd emoselohw from the garden and putting it into a bowl of know something about it. The sin of taking a frog he had put it there himself, so he felt entitled to ; was a frog in Nicholas' basin of bread-and-milk; dramatic part of the incident was that there really colouration and markings of the alleged frog. The nonsense, and described with much detail the nevertheless, to talk what seemed the veriest he was not to talk nonsense; he continued, possibly be a frog in his bread-and-milk and that better people had told him that there could not that there was a frog in it. Older and wiser and bread-and-milk on the seemingly frivolous ground morning he had refused to eat his wholesome be of the party; he was in disgrace. Only that to the sands at Jagborough. Nicholas was not to The children were to be driven, as a special treat,

 $^{\rm W}$ γου said there couldn't possibly be a frog in my bread-and-milk; there was a frog in my

the utmost assurance.

.....

artichokes and raspberry canes. and rather hopeless search for him among the lilac bushes; she was now engaged in energetic over the wall behind the sheltering screen of the had leapt to the conclusion that he had climbed bne ,eonereeqqesib pnol sid te suoioiqeue nworp from the gooseberry garden without. She had his aunt in shrill vociferation of his name came duck and assigning a life-history to it, the voice of he was admiring the colouring of the mandarin portrait gallery of undreamed-of creatures. And as turkeys, ibises, golden pheasants, a whole bustards, kites, toucans, tiger-bitterns, brush magpie or wood-pigeon; here were herons and few birds, of which the largest were an occasional when he went for a walk, Nicholas came across a And such birds! In the garden, and in the lanes behold, it was full of coloured pictures of birds. black covers; Nicholas peeped into it, and, appearance was a large square book with plain delightful to see and to handle. Less promising in hump-necked bulls, and peacocks and goblins, cotton-wool were little brass figures,

"Nicholas, Nicholas!" she screamed, "you are to come out of this at once. It's no use trying to hide there; I can see you all the time."

A few decent tears were looked for on the part of Nicholas when the moment for the departure of the expedition arrived. As a matter of fact, however, all the crying was done by his girl-cousin, who scraped her knee rather painfully uninteresting younger brother were to be taken to Jagborough sands that afternoon and he was to stay at home. His cousins' aunt, who insisted, by an unwarranted stretch of imagination, in styling herself his aunt also, had hastily invented the Jagborough expedition in order to impress on Nicholas the delights that he had justly forfeited by his disgraceful conduct at the breakfast- table. It was her habit, whenever one of the children fell from grace, to improvise something of a festival nature from which the offender would be rigorously debarred; if all the children sinned collectively they were suddenly informed of a circus in a neighbouring town, a circus of unrivalled merit and uncounted elephants, to which, but for their depravity, they would have been taken that very day.

bread-and-milk," he repeated, with the insistence of a skilled tactician who does not intend to shift from favourable ground.

So his boy-cousin and girl-cousin and his quite

.ni pnildmeros sew and the carriage as she was high spirits that should have characterised it. the party drove off without any of the elation of "How she did howl," said Nicholas cheerfully, as

"Isavlazmadt vojna about over those beautiful sands. How they will aunt; "it will be a glorious afternoon for racing "She'll soon get over that," said the soi-disant

".tight." chuckle; "his boots are hurting him. They're too race much either," said Nicholas with a grim floow and bne , hour flasmin yoins floow yddoa"

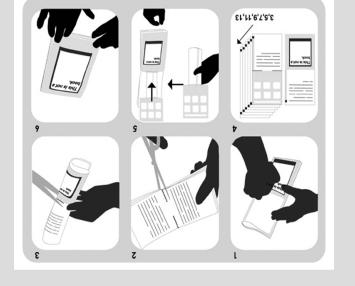

the aunt with some asperity. "Why didn't he tell me they were hurting?" asked

".spnidt often don't listen when we tell you important "He told you twice, but you weren't listening. You

.toeld the aunt, changing the subject. "You are not to go into the gooseberry garden,"

"Why not?" demanded Nicholas.

. Vlitily. Because you are in disgrace," said the aunt available to download, print out and share. DIFFUSION eBooks are designed to be freely created on: Wed Mar 5 15:54:27 2008

www.diffusion.org.uk

Saki (H H Munro) The Lumber Room

SI

いわいらわままいを

CO proboscis

Nicholas made one or two sorties into the front garden, wriggling his way with obvious stealth of purpose towards one or other of the doors, but never able for a moment to evade the aunt's watchful eye. As a matter of fact, he had no intention of trying to get into the gooseberry

Now the gooseberry garden had two doors by which it might be entered, and once a small person like Nicholas could slip in there he could effectually disappear from view amid the masking growth of artichokes, raspberry canes, and fruit bushes. The aunt had many other things to do that afternoon, but she spent an hour or two in trivial gardening operations among flower beds and shrubberies, whence she could keep a watchful eye on the two doors that led to the forbidden paradise. She was a woman of few ideas, with immense powers of concentration.

Nicholas did not admit the flawlessness of the reasoning; he felt perfectly capable of being in disgrace and in a gooseberry garden at the same moment. His face took on an expression of considerable obstinacy. It was clear to his aunt that he was determined to get into the gooseberry garden, "only," as she remarked to herself, "because I have told him he is not to."

unknown land, compared with which the turned. The door opened, and Nicholas was in an accident. The key turned stiffly in the lock, but it did not believe in trusting too much to luck and practised with the key of the schoolroom door; he and turning locks, but for some days past he had experience of the art of fitting keys into keyholes privileged persons. Nicholas had not had much which opened a way only for aunts and such-like lumber-room secure from unauthorised intrusion, instrument which kept the mysteries of the key was as important as it looked; it was the which reposed a fat, important-looking key. The on a chair in the library one could reach a shelf on that had long germinated in his brain. By standing and rapidly put into execution a plan of action suspicions Nicholas slipped back into the house Having thoroughly confirmed and fortified her sentry-duty for the greater part of the afternoon. belief that would keep her on self-imposed that his aunt should believe that he had; it was a garden, but it was extremely convenient for him

Often and often Nicholas had pictured to himself what the lumber-room might be like, that region gooseberry garden was a stale delight, a mere

.ensterial pleasure.

Transcribed from the 1914 John Lane, The Bodley Head edition by David Price, ccx074@coventry.ac.uk

Text from Project Gutenberg: www.gutenberg.net

9

••••••••

first place it was large and dimly lit, one high window opening on to the forbidden garden being its only source of illumination. In the second place it was a storehouse of unimagined treasures. The aunt-by-assertion was one of those people who think that things spoil by use and consign them to dust and damp by way of preserving them. Such parts of the house as Nicholas knew best were rather bare and cheerless, but here there were wonderful things for the eye to feast on. First and foremost there was a piece of framed tapestry that was evidently meant to be a fire-screen. To Nicholas it was a living, breathing story; he sat down on a roll of Indian hangings, glowing in wonderful colours beneath a layer of dust, and took in all the details of the tapestry picture. A man, dressed in the hunting costume of some remote period, had just transfixed a stag with an arrow; it could not have been a difficult shot because the stag was only one or two paces away from him; in the thickly-growing vegetation that the picture suggested it would not have been difficult to creep up to a feeding stag, and the two spotted dogs that were springing forward to join think that there were more than four wolves and the possibilities of the scene; he was inclined to Vicholas sat for many golden minutes revolving hit a large stag at a ridiculously short range. knew about his skill in shooting was that he could might miss with one or both of them; all one had only two arrows left in his quiver, and he the four wolves if they made an attack? The man would the man and his dogs be able to cope with of them hidden behind the trees, and in any case through the wood? There might be more than four galloping wolves were coming in his direction huntsman see, what Nicholas saw, that four the picture was simple, if interesting, but did the heel till the arrow was discharged. That part of in the chase had evidently been trained to keep to

But there were other objects of delight and interest claiming his instant attention: there were quaint twisted candlesticks in the shape of snakes, and a teapot fashioned like a china duck, out of whose open beak the tea was supposed to come. How dull and shapeless the nursery teapot seemed in comparison! And there was a carved sandal-wood box packed tight with aromatic cotton-wool, and between the layers of that the man and his dogs were in a tight corner.

"Your voice doesn't sound like aunt's," objected Nicholas; "you may be the Evil One tempting me to be disobedient. Aunt often tells me that the Evil One tempts me and that I always yield. This time I'm not going to yield."

"Don't talk nonsense," said the prisoner in the tank; "go and fetch the ladder."

"Will there be strawberry ام for tea?" asked Nicholas innocently.

"Certainly there will be," said the aunt, privately resolving that Nicholas should have none of it.

"Now I know that you are the Evil One and not aunt," shouted Nicholas gleefully; "when we asked aunt for strawberry jam yesterday she said there wasn't any. I know there are four jars of it in the store cupboard, because I looked, and of course you know it's there, but she doesn't, because she said there wasn't any. Oh, Devil, you have sold yourself!"

There was an unusual sense of luxury in being able to talk to an aunt as though one was talking to the Evil One, but Nicholas knew, with childish discernment, that such luxuries were not to be over-indulged in. He walked noisily away, and it was a kitchenmaid, in search of parsley, who eventually rescued the aunt from the rain-water tank.

Tea that evening was partaken of in a fearsome silence. The tide had been at its highest when the children had arrived at Jagborough Cove, so there had been no sands to play on -- a circumstance organising her punitive expedition. The tightness of Bobby's boots had had disastrous effect on his temper the whole of the afternoon, and altogether

the children could not have been said to have enjoyed themselves. The aunt maintained the Nicholas, he, too, was silent, in the absorption of possible, he considered, that the huntsman would escape with his hounds while the wolves feasted

that was so carefully sealed from youthful eyes answered. It came up to his expectations. In the

and concerning which no questions were ever

one who has much to think about; it was just frozen muteness of one who has suffered undignified and unmerited detention in a rain-water tank for thirty-five minutes. As for on the stricken stag.

that the aunt had overlooked in the haste of

12 II

7

8