

was once hunted into a cemetery somewhere on the banks of the Ganges by a pack of pariah dogs, and had to spend the night in a newly dug grave with the creatures snarling and grinning and foaming just above him. Enough to make anyone their nerve."

Romance at short notice was her speciality.

-----
Transcribed from the 1914 John Lane, The Bodley Head edition by David Price, ccx074@coventry.ac.uk

Text from Project Gutenberg: www.gutenberg.net

The Open Window

Saki (H H Munro)

"I expect it was the spaniel," said the niece calmly, "he told me he had a horror of dogs. He would think he had seen a ghost."

good-bye or apology when you arrived. One illnesses, and dashed off without a word of Mrs. Sappleton, "could only talk about his

"A most extraordinary man, a Mr. Nuttel," said who bolted out as we came up?"

"fairly muddy, but most of its dry. Who was that

"white mackintosh, coming in through the window?

"Here we are, my dear," said the bearer of the

the hedge to avoid an imminent collision.

A cyclist coming along the road had to run into

were dimly-noted stages in his headlong retreat.

Framton grabbed wildly at his stick and hat; the

you bound?"

chanted out of the dusk: "I said, Bertie, why do

the house, and then a hoarse young voice

kept close at their heels. Noiselessly they neared hung over his shoulders. A tired brown spaniel

them was additinally burdened with a white coat

they all carried guns under their arms, and one of walking across the lawn towards the window?

In the deepening twilight three figures were

had sufficient silent communion.

asked the niece, when she judged that they had

"Do you know many of the people round here?"

of introduction, came into the nice division.

lady to whom he was presenting one of the letters

Framton wondered whether Mrs. Sappleton, the were quite nice."

there. Some of them, as far as I can remember,

letters of introduction to all the people I know

than ever from mopping. I shall just give you to a living soul, and your nerves will be worse

"You will bury yourself down there and not speak

he was preparing to migrate to this rural retreat;

"I know how it will be," his sister had said when undergoing.

the nerve cure which he was supposed to be

of total strangers would do much towards helping

ever whether these formal visits on a succession

that was to come. Privately he doubted more than the moment without unduly discounting the aunt something which should duly flatten the niece of Framton Nuttel endeavoured to say the correct

the meantime you must try and put up with me."

a very self-possessed young lady of fifteen, "in

"My aunt will be down presently, Mr. Nuttel," said

available to download, print out and share.
DIFFUSION Ebooks are designed to be freely www.diffusion.org.uk

created on: Wed Mar 5 15:54:27 2008
Saki (H H Munro)
The Open Window

"Hardly a soul," said Framton. "My sister was staying here, at the rectory, you know, some four years ago, and she gave me letters of introduction to some of the people here."

He made the last statement in a tone of distinct regret.

"Then you know practically nothing about my aunt?" pursued the self-possessed young lady.

"Only her name and address," admitted the caller. He was wondering whether Mrs. Sappleton was in the married or widowed state. An undefinable something about the room seemed to suggest masculine habitation.

"Her great tragedy happened just three years ago," said the child; "that would be since your sister's time."

"Her tragedy?" asked Framton; somehow in this restful country spot tragedies seemed out of place.

"You may wonder why we keep that window wide open on an October afternoon," said the niece, indicating a large French window that opened on to a lawn.

"Out through that window, three years ago to a snipe-shooting ground they were all three came back. In crossing the moor to their favourite places that were safe in other years gave way been that dreadful wet summer, you know, and suddenly without warning. Their bodies were engulfed in a treacherous piece of bog. It had never recovered. That was the dreadful part of it."

Here the child's voice lost its self-possessed note and became falteringly human. "Poor aunt always thinks that they will come back some day, they and the little brown spaniel that was lost with them, and walk in at quite dusk. Poor dear aunt, every evening till it is quite dark, poor dear aunt, used to do. That is why the window is kept open she has often told me how they went out, her tease her, because she said it got on her nerves. Bertrand, why do you bound? as he always did to arm, and Ronnié, her youngest brother, singing husband with his white waterproof coat over his Do you know, sometimes on still, quiet evenings

"It is quite warm for the time of the year," said Framton; "but has that window got anything to do with the tragedy?"

like this, I almost get a creepy feeling that they will all walk in through that window --"

She broke off with a little shudder. It was a relief to Framton when the aunt bustled into the room with a whirl of apologies for being late in making her appearance.

"I hope Vera has been amusing you?" she said.

"She has been very interesting," said Framton.

"I hope you don't mind the open window," said Mrs. Sappleton briskly; "my husband and brothers will be home directly from shooting, and they always come in this way. They've been out for snipe in the marshes today, so they'll make a fine mess over my poor carpets. So like you men-folk, isn't it?"

She rattled on cheerfully about the shooting and the scarcity of birds, and the prospects for duck in the winter. To Framton it was all purely horrible. He made a desperate but only partially successful effort to turn the talk on to a less ghastly topic; he was conscious that his hostess was giving him only a fragment of her attention, and her eyes were constantly straying past him to the open window and the lawn beyond. It was certainly an unfortunate coincidence that he should have paid direction.

round in his seat and looked in the same In a chill shock of nameless fear Framton swung the open window with dazed horror in her eyes. comprehension. The child was staring out through nice with a look intended to convey sympathetic Framton shivered slightly and turned towards the

"Here they are at last!" she cried. "Just in time for tea, and don't they look as if they were muddy up to the eyes!"

"No?" said Mrs. Sappleton, in a voice which only replaced a yawn at the last moment. Then she suddenly brightened into alert attention -- but not to what Framton was saying.

"The doctors agree in ordering me complete rest, of diet they are not so much in agreement," he "infirmities, their cause and cure. On the matter for the least detail of one's ailments and strangers and chance acquaintances are hungry

under the tolerably widespread delusion that total

exercise," announced Framton, who laboured

of anything in the nature of violent physical

an absence of mental excitement, and avoidance

"The visit on this tragic anniversary.